Proof: booking a holiday can change your life

"WHEN I GET HOME I'M GOING TO LEARN HOW TO SWIM"

We've all sat on holiday watching a sunset, Mojito in hand, and vowed to change our lives on our return. Well now it seems those musings aren't just distant pipe dreams.

Over half of all life-changing decisions are made on holiday and turned into reality the minute we clear customs, according to a new survey by luxury travel experts Kuoni. These findings have given birth to a new trend; the 'changepation' - holidays taken in order to make big decisions. Of those surveyed, 74% said that a romantic getaway can make or break their relationship, with almost all of us either deciding to spice them up or bin them entirely on our return. And 58% of those who discuss divorce while away take immediate action once back home.

Changepations aren't always good news for bosses, either. With work/life balance being the biggest holiday talking point, 28% of people decide to change their job post-holiday, a figure which increases the more you earn.

The Kuoni report also revealed that most of us consider a holiday to be more important than ever during the recession, with 30% of us preferring to save for a week away rather than for a new house. Sounds like the perfect excuse to book that break.

ART

Anna Wintour immortalised on canvas

Never intentionally seen without her trademark sunglasses, American Vogue editor Anna Wintour, the most revered (and feared) fashion editor of recent times, has been immortalised by Pop artist, Alex Katz, lens-free and looking - dare we say it - rather gentle. The artist, who painted Wintour last year, asked her to remove her glasses after noticing her "lovely" eyes in the documentary The September Issue. And Wintour later said of her experience, "I couldn't think of a nicer way to spend the afternoon." The piece will take pride of place in Katz' upcoming National Portrait Gallery exhibition, Alex Katz Portraits, which will run from 15 May.
